

The endangerment of human life may be a laughing matter to some, but not to the kin of cyclists who are maimed or killed by hostile drivers, and there are many of them every year. Bob and Madison's comments tacitly encourage hostile drivers to harass bicyclists, and may well contribute to someone's injuries or death. If it were funny, would they tell school children to borrow daddy's gun and threaten their classmates? What they said would be funny only if cyclists were not killed every year by being knocked off the road - but they are killed - three in my county this year. The FCC should permit sick jokes only to a certain point, and Bob and Madison went past that point, well past it. This is not a close call among competing interests; this is reckless endangerment.
